

It's about getting the beauty of what you've found in your life to come alive; that's how I see objects.'

GET THE LOOK

- When you see something you really love, that's a good buy. On the other hand, it could simply be the seashell from the beach or the bit of driftwood that can sit beautifully by a fabulous piece of china. Things don't have to match each other perfectly in order to make your home look beautiful, choose things from your heart.
- Speaking from a minimalist's heart, I would choose one or two colours and keep the rest of the home as a soft neutral palette. The colours don't have to be everywhere to make a statement but use them to create movement throughout the home.
- Keep it simple and be mindful about what you buy. By this, I mean treasure what it is you are buying. Use your money wisely and don't just buy something because it is a fad. I don't think that makes a great home.
- Pull things left of centre. We can all line up candles down the centre of a table, that's easy, but to put out something from left field and not make it always perfect works even better.
- Have a statement piece in your home. We have a beautiful plate on the wall which was supposedly the soup bowl from a dinner service owned by WA's first governor-general.
